Boston's preliminary municipal elections on Tuesday narrowed down those in the running for multiple races ahead of November, but there will still be a lot of names on the ballot with candidates competing for role of mayor as well as several City Council seats. Stay up to date with metroboston.us.

OBAMACARE REPEAL IN US SENATE COLLAPSES

Another Republican attempt to dismantle Obamacare collapsed in the U.S. Congress on Tuesday as the party was unable to win enough support from its own senators for a bill to repeal the healthcare reform law. Several Republican senators said there will be no vote in the Senate after some lawmakers withheld support for the measure. "We basically ran out of time," said Sen. Ron Johnson. Sen. Pat Roberts, another Republican, told reporters the party would target healthcare "in some form" later in the current legislative session. Failing to carry through on a 7-year-old effort to roll back the 2010 healthcare law would be an embarrassing setback for Republicans and a heavy blow for President Donald Trump, who vowed during the 2016 election campaign to scrap Obamacare.

STUDENTS PROTEST AG SPEECH AT GEORGETOWN

2 Students and faculty at Georgetown Law School gathered on Tuesday to protest that U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions was delivering an address about the right of free speech on college campuses to an invitation-only audience without giving critics of the Trump administration an opportunity to ask questions. Several dozen protesters stood on the front steps of the school, some with duct tape over their mouths to symbolize that they felt their views were censored from the event. Some held signs denouncing racism, censorship and President Donald Trump's decision to rescind "DACA," the Obama administration's Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals policy that shields immigrants who were brought to the United States as children.

DUTERTE WANTS US HELP IN FIGHTING DRUGS

4 Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte urged the United States on Tuesday to help control drug smuggling, blaming Taiwan and Hong Kong-based criminal gangs for using his country as a shipping hub. In a speech, he also said illegal drugs had funded the seizure by Islamist militants of large parts of the southern city of Marawi in May. More than 800 people have died in the conflict, which Duterte said was triggered by an attempt to arrest a drug personality, who he did not identify. "The Philippines is a transhipment of shabu to America," Duterte told members of the Philippine Constitution Association, referring to the local term for methamphetamine. "It behoves upon America to work closely with the Republic of the Philippines, especially on this serious matter."

TWITTER TO TEST 280-CHARACTER TWEETS

5 The days of Twitter Inc. limiting messages to 140 characters, a signature of the social network since its launch in 2006, may be numbered. Twitter said on Tuesday that it would begin a test with a random sample of users allowing them to send tweets that are as long as 280 characters, double the existing cap, in most languages around the world. The San Francisco-based company has stood by its short messages as a defining characteristic — like chirps from a bird, which is the company logo — even as users found ways around the limit, such as posting photos of text. In a blog post on Tuesday, Twitter said its emphasis on brevity would never change but that it had been wondering whether people could express themselves easily enough, hurting the service's popularity.

Vanessa Marcotte was found dead in Princeton in 2016. MASS STATE POLICE

Gasoline found on Vanessa Marcotte's body, suspect bought gas that day, cops say

The woman killed while jogging in Princeton in 2016, was found to have traces of gas on her.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Traces of gasoline and bug spray were found on items on Princeton, Massachusetts, jogger Vanessa Marcotte's body, according to new court documents.

A hair tie and socks found on Marcotte's body tested positive for gasoline and DEET, and officials believe that the suspected killer bought gas on the day Marcotte was murdered, according to a search warrant affidavit, via MassLive. The documents were filed in Worcester District Court on Monday.

Marcotte, 27, was a Massachusetts native who worked for Google in New York City. She had been visiting her family in Princeton in August of 2016; her body was found in the woods after she went for a jog.

Angelo Colon-Ortiz, 31, was indicted for the murder of Marcotte in June and is being held on $10 million bail.

Colon-Ortiz bought $5 of gas on the day Marcotte was killed, court documents detail. The store is about six miles from where Marcotte's body was found, MassLive reports.

Marcotte was found around 8:30 p.m. August 7, 2016, wearing only a sports bra, the warrant details, according to the Boston Globe. Her running shorts, underwear, baseball cap and one shoe were missing.

"Preliminary observations indicate that there is a secondary crime scene where the assault and or murder most likely occurred," the affidavit read, according to MassLive.

Marcotte had signs of head trauma and her hands and feet had been burned, "presumably in an attempt to destroy potential DNA evidence," the affidavit said, according to the Associated Press.

It was previously reported that DNA was recovered under Marcotte's fingernails, a sign that she struggled with her attacker. That DNA helped lead to the arrest of Colon-Ortiz, whose DNA matched those samples.

Investigators were also led to Colon-Ortiz because of a witness who reportedly saw an SUV around the time of the murder near where Marcotte's body was found. A state trooper later saw a vehicle that matched that description and took own the license plate number, leading to Colon-Ortiz.

Colon-Ortiz reportedly told investigators that he could not recall his whereabouts on that day, and volunteers a DNA sample. He has pleaded not guilty to Marcotte's murder.

PUERTO RICO

Answering critics, Trump defends Puerto Rico aid effort

President Trump said on Tuesday his administration was doing a "really good job" helping Puerto Rico recover from Hurricane Maria amid complaints that federal aid was too slow reaching the U.S. territory.

Trump agreed to boost federal disaster aid to the island, increasing funding to assist with debris removal and protective measures. He also promised to visit Puerto Rico on Oct. 3.

Critics and some of Puerto Rico's 3.4 million residents accused the U.S. government of having been slower to respond with water, food and electric grid repairs than on the mainland, though the island's people are U.S. citizens.

Maria roared ashore last Wednesday as the most powerful hurricane to hit Puerto Rico in almost 90 years, destroying homes and infrastructure. It was the third major hurricane to hit the United States in recent weeks, following Harvey and Irma.

"We've gotten A-pluses on Texas and in Florida, and we will also on Puerto Rico," Trump told reporters. "The difference is this is an island sitting in the middle of an ocean. It's a big ocean, it's a very big ocean."

Some cellphone communication had been restored to about 35 percent of the island, acting U.S. Homeland Secretary Elaine Duke said on Tuesday. REUTERS

Q&A with Pat Payaso, the clown candidate running for Boston City Council

Pat Payaso, a candidate for an at-large Boston City Council seat, talked with Metro about the political views behind the clown mask.

Pat Payaso is tired of other "political clowns." DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN / METRO

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

You may have seen someone clowning around outside of polling stations on Tuesday as Boston residents voted in the preliminary municipal elections. Roxbury resident Pat Payaso is running for an at-large City Council seat in Boston with an interesting approach to garnering attention: "Payaso" means "clown" in Spanish, and the candidate appears decked out in the full costume.

The Boston Herald wrote that Payaso was formerly known as Kevin McCrea, a Boston developer and former mayoral candidate who changed his name at a New Orleans district court in February, according to documents filed with Massachusetts Secretary of State William Galvin. When asked about pronouns, Payaso told Metro, "I go by both 'he' and 'she.'"

Tuesday's election doesn't affect Payaso at all, as there are no preliminaries for at-large seats, but the clown was still out appealing to voters. Payaso spoke with Metro about why he's running for Boston City Council and how the clownish approach to politics stems from serious concerns.

What prompted you to run for City Council, specifically for an at-large seat?
Payaso: I'm running because of I'm tired of the political clowns owned by the 1 percent treating us working citizens like rubber chickens. I'm tired of the tax breaks, giveaways, and hypocrisy. I think all Americans want the politicians to sit down and actually enact policies that help average people. We want them to solve problems, and most people are seeing compromise as a strength not a weakness. Studies have shown that politicians talk about helping working people out, but their policies overwhelmingly help the rich.

Will you still wear the clown outfit if elected?
Many people ask me if I will wear the outfit! And I will wear it to at least some City Council meetings, especially if I think some funny business is going to happen and needs to be highlighted.

You said you're going to have a clown horn on your desk at City Council meetings. What for?
I will have the clown horn on my desk to call out the shenanigans that go on in government [such as] pension padding, property giveaways, like I highlighted during my mayoral run eight years ago.

What issue is most important to you?
Universal healthcare is the biggest issue facing America. The schools are the No. 1 issue facing the city, which is why I have promised to visit each and every school in the city, something none of the other candidates are willing to do. There are some impressive candidates running, why wouldn't we want them to visit every school and talk to the students about the value of education, hard work, and grit in being successful in life? We spend 40 percent roughly of our city budget on schools, is it too much to ask the counselors to spend 20 percent of their time figuring out where the money is spent and making the system better?

What reactions have you received so far?
The reaction from the voters has been incredible, everyone loves it. I was worried at first, but everyone gets it. One voter said, "I get it, we are the clowns who keep electing these people." I think it is a common sentiment.

You unveiled your clown car — how does this fit into your approach to politics?
I am trying to use humor to raise voter awareness of issues and shenanigans going on. The clown car is fun, and so far [Tuesday] morning it has been amazing how much people love it, take pictures of it and laugh. That is the best part, bringing smiles to people's faces. We have serious issues to face, but the role of government should be one of making the citizens happy, healthy and educated in their community.

Payaso will be on the Nov. 8 ballot for Boston's municipal election, facing off against four incumbents and three other challengers for four at-large City Council seats.

The annual Best Hospitals rankings, now in their 28th year, are part of U.S. News' patient portal, designed to help patients make informed decisions about where to receive care for life-threatening conditions or for common elective procedures.

Dana-Farber/Brigham and Women's Cancer Center is a collaboration of Dana-Farber Cancer Institute and Brigham and Women's Hospital, dedicated to providing comprehensive and specialized care for adults with cancer and related diseases.

"This recognition is a testament to our talented and compassionate caregivers," said Laurie H. Glimcher, MD, President and CEO, Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. "We are extremely proud of the dedicated professionals at the Dana-Farber/Brigham and Women's Cancer Center who work together as one team with a singular focus on conquering cancer and advancing the way cancer care is delivered," said Betsy Nabel, MD, President of Brigham Health. "More important than any awards or accolades, however, is the hope that we bring to patients who are battling cancer and their loved ones."

In June, U.S. News ranked Dana-Farber/Boston Children's Cancer and Blood Disorders Center the No. 2 pediatric cancer program in the country.

"For nearly three decades, we've strived to make hospital quality more transparent to healthcare consumers nationwide," said Ben Harder, managing editor and chief of health analysis at U.S. News. "By providing the most comprehensive data available, we hope to give patients the information they need to find the best care across a range of specialties."

For the 2017-18 rankings, U.S. News evaluated more than 4,500 medical centers nationwide in 25 specialties, procedures and conditions. In the 16 specialty areas, 146 hospitals were ranked in at least one specialty. In rankings by state and metro area, U.S. News recognized hospitals as high performing across multiple areas of care.

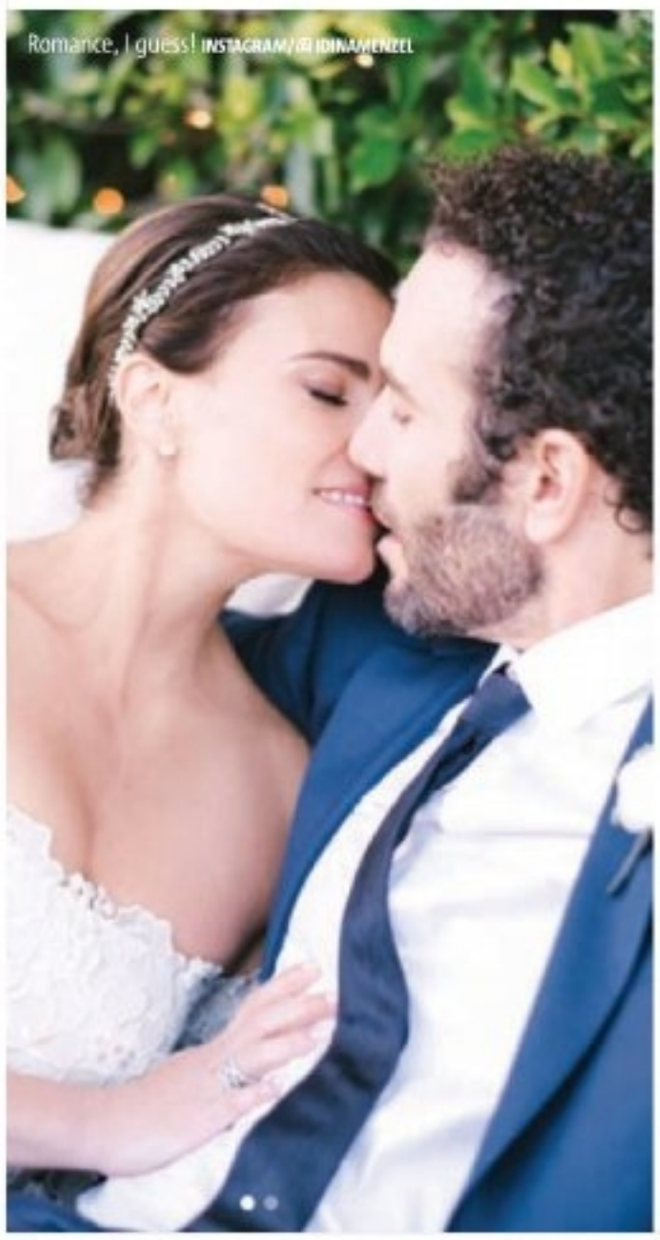
Idina Menzel got married again



Romance, I guess! INSTAGRAM/@IDINAMENZEL

Idina Menzel just can't get enough of her "Rent" cast members. First, she was married to Taye Diggs — aka bougie-ass-Benny from the original Broadway cast — from 2003 to 2014. Now, she's married to a dude named Aaron Lohr who was in the 2005 bummer film version, also called "Rent." My girl is nothing if not consistent.

The 46-year-old shared a very nice picture via both Twitter and Instagram, writing "Wanted to let you know... married the love of my life Aaron Lohr this weekend at our home," she wrote. "Dad & son walked me down the aisle. It was magical."

Menzel and Lohr, 41, have been dating since 2015 and got engaged a year ago. If you're wondering who, exactly, this man is, he apparently has starred in both "D2: The Mighty Ducks," and "D3: The Mighty Ducks." Neat-o!

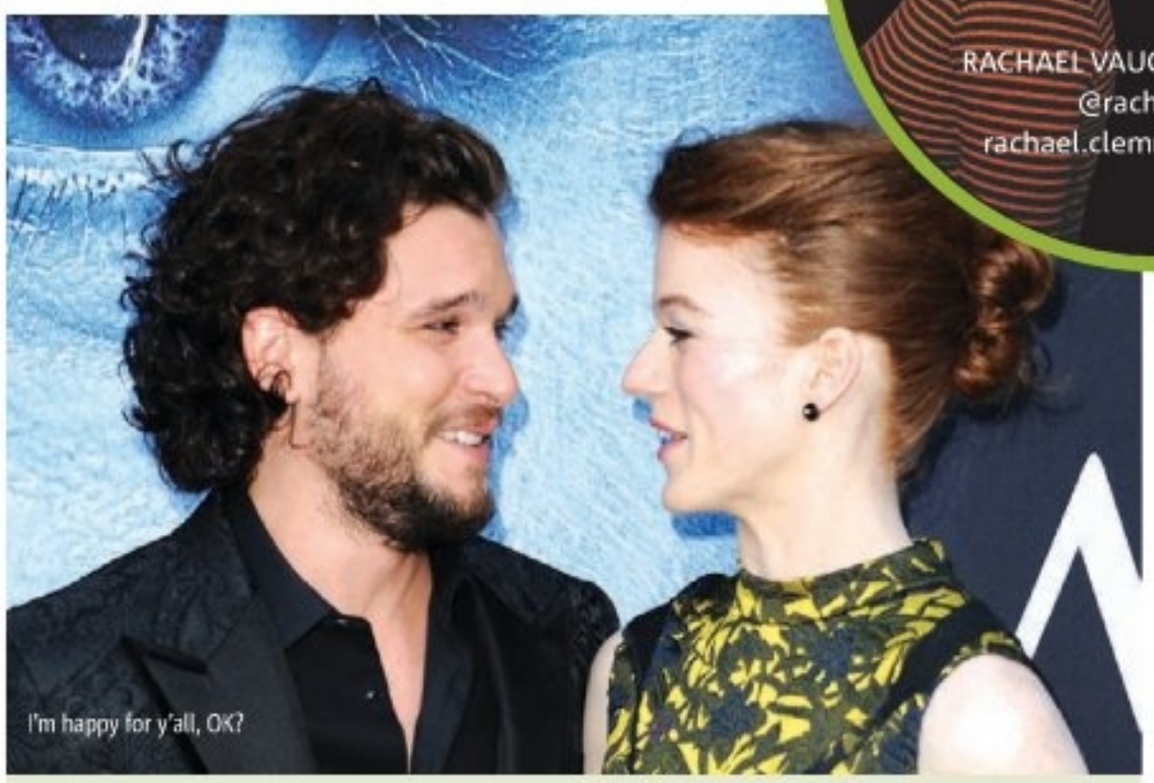
'Fixer Upper' is done, y'all

Insert joke about not being able to fix that which is already broken.
ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES UNLESS OTHERWISE STATED

Chip and Joanna Gaines (also known as joyfully homeless-looking guy on that show my mother watches and his wife) announced Tuesday that their hit HGTV series, "Fixer Upper," is coming to an end. Their excuse basically boils down to, "This was a hard decision, but don't worry or question the veracity of our marriage, everything is great!" Very convincing stuff, essentially.

"It is with both sadness and expectation that we share the news that Season 5 of 'Fixer Upper' will be our last," they wrote, noting that the decision wasn't easy but they're "confident that this is the right choice for us." Sure!

"Our family is healthy and our marriage has never been stronger," they wrote. "This is just us recognizing that we need to catch our breath for a moment." Oh, my. The Gaines doth protest too much, methinks.



I'm happy for y'all, OK?

Jon Snow put a ring on it

Good news, for once: The actual human embodiments of "Game of Thrones" characters Jon Snow and Ygritte are getting married IRL. Someone pop the inexpensive sparkling wine!

Five years after their onscreen romance — and a very delicate cave scene that we will never forget — a source confirms to People that Kit Harington and Rose Leslie are engaged. The joy I feel for them is unlike anything I've felt since rewatching "Aladdin" last Christmas.

Harington recently opened up about their boo-boo-ship — admitting that the early weeks of shooting the second season of "Thrones" were his favorite of the series. Because he fell in love!

"Because the country is beautiful, because the Northern Lights are magical, and because it was there that I fell in love," he said in a cover story for L'Uomo Vogue. Aw.

I, for one, am still convinced love is dead. But if real life versions of Jon Snow and Ygritte can find love, perhaps there is hope in this garbage world.

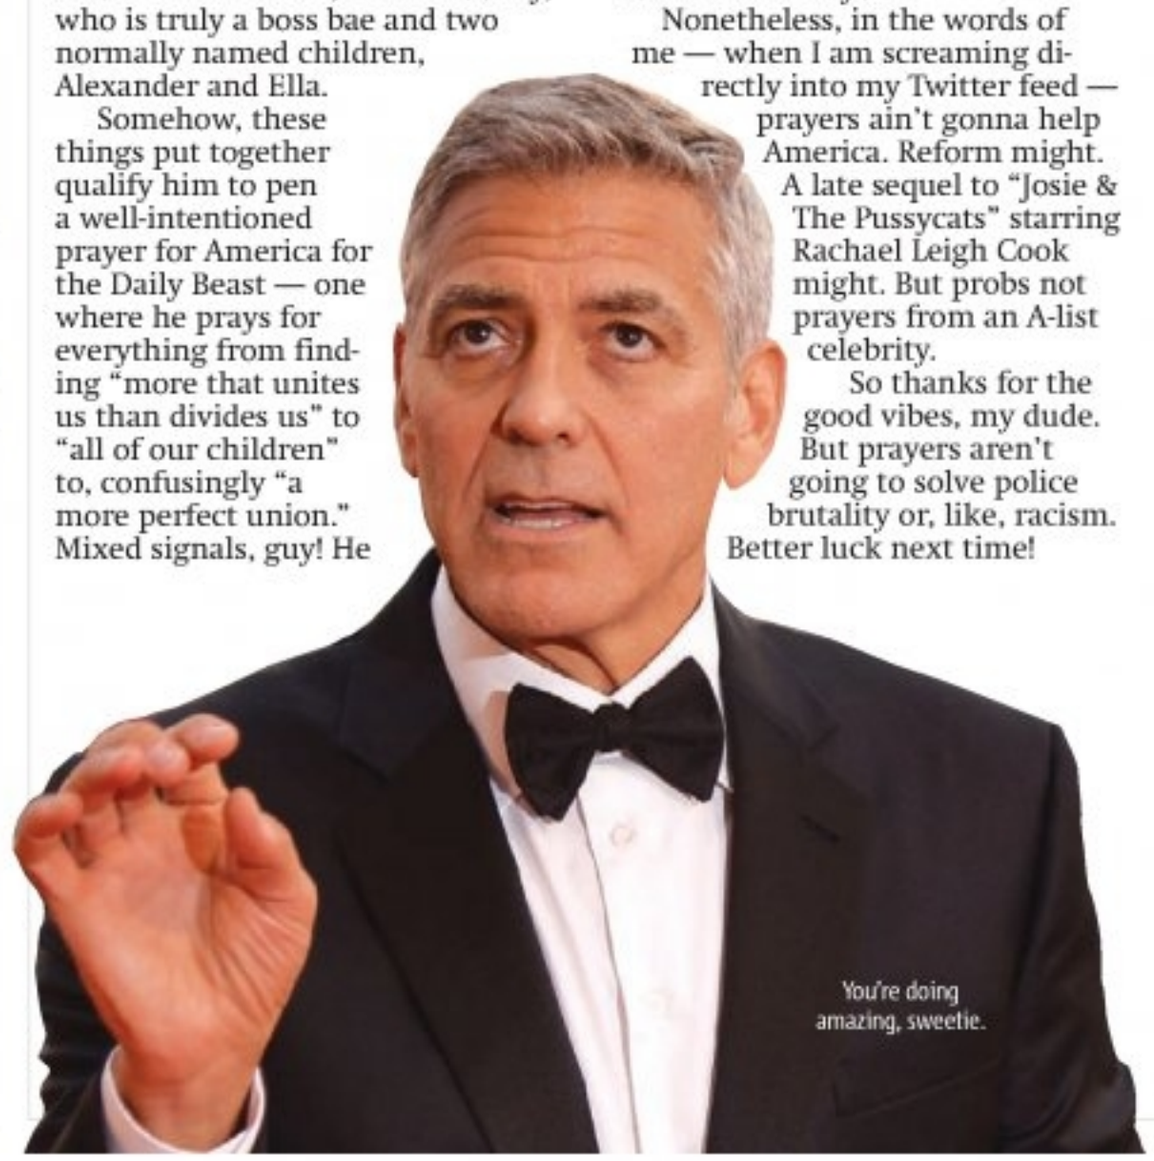
George Clooney is praying for you

George Clooney is a charming, well, beloved American actor. He has a wife, Amal Clooney, who is truly a boss bae and two normally named children, Alexander and Ella.

Somehow, these things put together qualify him to pen a well-intentioned prayer for America for the Daily Beast — one where he prays for everything from finding "more that unites us than divides us" to "all of our children" to, confusingly "a more perfect union." Mixed signals, guy! He ends by writing, "And when I pray, I kneel," which offers a tiny shred of context. Thank you!

Nonetheless, in the words of me — when I am screaming directly into my Twitter feed — prayers ain't gonna help America. Reform might. A late sequel to "Josie & The Pussycats" starring Rachael Leigh Cook might. But probs not prayers from an A-list celebrity.

So thanks for the good vibes, my dude. But prayers aren't going to solve police brutality or, like, racism. Better luck next time!



You're doing amazing, sweetie.

This Franklin Park Zoo flower exhibit stinks

Literally.

ZIPPORAH OSEI
@MetroBOS
letters@metro.us

The Franklin Park Zoo is preparing for one of its largest plants to blossom within the next week. While seeing the bloom is rare, the highlight of the event is the smell.

Fester, one of the zoo's more exotic flowers, literally smells like death. The plant is an Amorphophallus titanum, a breed that emits a putrid aroma close to that of rotting meat when it blooms.

The smell is necessary to attract the carnivorous insects that pollinate the plant, but has onlookers pinching their noses to catch a glimpse of the bloom. It has more than earned the nickname "corpse flower."

"The smell is strongest first thing in the morning," says Harry Liggett, Zoo New England manager of horticulture and grounds. "To be safe, [visitors] could bring a good old fashioned clothespin for your nose and, of course, a camera to take some photos."

These plants can go many years without blooming. When they do, it lasts only 24 to 48 hours. There is no way of knowing the exact date Fester will bloom, but all signs point to soon.

The plant has bloomed twice before, in 2012 and 2014, and is growing rapidly in preparation for its next showcase. Corpse flowers can grow up to 9 feet in their lifetime, and 4 to 5 inches a day as they prepare to bloom.

The flower, which originates from Sumatra, has demanding environmental requirements and conditions. When it does open its petals, the green exterior reveals a beautiful, bright-purple flower — and that rancid smell.

The corpse flower typically opens up late at night, offering an awful odor to anyone who passes by. Staff say they've come into work early in the morning and have been able to smell it through the entire building.

The Franklin Park Zoo has seven corpse flowers, but Fester is the only one on display. You can find the smelly plant in the zoo's Tropical Forest.

‘American Horror Story: Cult’ star Evan Peters relates to his psycho character in one little way

Evan Peters, one of the main faces of the “American Horror Story” franchise, wants you to know this season of “AHS” is not all about President Trump, and there are more important issues facing America than the NFL right now.

While this season opens on Election Night, fans are going to see that theme drop away and Peters’ character, Kai Anderson, blossom like a corpse flower.

On his character, Kai Anderson:
“The character is insane,” Evans told us Monday. “And it’s not really about the election. That’s the opening act of the show, but it’s really just a starting point for everything that Kai’s trying to do and trying to accomplish.

“It’s the spark that’s going to start the flame that’s going to allow him to bring it all down and become the leader that he wants to be. The character as a whole has been challenging to play the whole way through because it’s only gotten crazier and crazier and he’s going more and more off the deep end, so it’s been challenging the whole way through.”

On relating to Kai:
“Important to question our leaders and it’s important to question everything that’s going on in the world right now and see if we can’t make it less corrupt and less polarizing.

“Something that Kai talks about a lot —and the only thing I’ve ever to related to about Kai is — [common sense]. I don’t understand why we can’t just have commonsense and compassion and love for one another and figure out how to do things in a fair just way so that everybody can be happy and have a fair shot and live their life the way they want to live it.”

GETTY

On his favorite “Cult” character:
“This has been the most challenging season that I’ve done, absolutely, so I’d have to say Kai [is my favorite]. Kai has been really taxing physically and emotionally on me, so it’s been the hardest one and the most challenging so it’s been the most fun to accomplish I think.”

On the takeaway message:
“Cults are real. It is a TV show, but it is sort of mirroring our time and it also mirroring the past of some of these cult leaders. To me, the show is 10 percent about politics and 90 percent about cults. It is ultimately about Kai and his journey for world domination. So I hope that people watch it and enjoy it … or are scared by it. [Laughs]

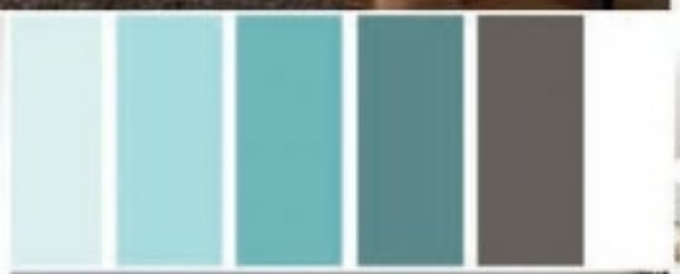
A mood board can help you visualize your space before you begin remodeling. FLICKR USER ALICIA CHENAUX



Creating a mood board for design inspo

Homepolish interior designer Ana Claudia Schultz tells us how the brainstorming tactic can help us visualize our remodeling goals. KATE MOONEY

Sometimes you look around your home and think that something's not quite right, but you're not sure what to change. Do you need to rethink the color scheme in your bedroom? Is it finally time to replace the couch the cat scratched up and kick those drab lamps to the curb? Maybe some greenery will liven up the place?

That's where a mood board comes in: a collage created with images of new furniture, paint or wallpaper swatches, lighting concepts and more design brainstorms so you can see your options in front of you.

"We are all visual people; however, not all of us can visualize," says NYC-based interior designer Ana Claudia Schultz. "Creating a mood board allows us to see all our selections on one page."

Schultz works with Homepolish, a nationwide interior-design start-up that connects clients with designers who can help them conceptualize and execute their remodeling goals (beginning at $130/hour).

How do you begin? Schultz recommends picking out one "inspiration image" such as a room that you love. Maybe you got inspired by something you saw on Apartment Therapy or Pinterest. Maybe you want your living room to look like Madeline Martha Mackenzie's (Reese Witherspoon) on "Big Little Lies." Your mood board, your vision!

From there, add images of furniture pieces that fit the look you're going for, but will also work in your real-life space. (If you want your fantasy to come true, you've got to be practical.) Once you've picked out your main items, then add the "layering pieces," such as rugs, lights, and accessories.

Your mood board can be virtual or physical. Schultz recommends using PowerPoint — "You can change the size of the images, format them as a collage, and also link images to vendors and stores, making it much easier to keep track of where to buy them," she says — but if you're more of a hands-on type, you can print pictures or cut them out from magazines and then pin or paste them on a foam core board.

Who knows, you might fall in love with your mood board and keep it around even after you've completed your reno project. "Put it up on the wall, share your process with friends — but only if it complements your space and design," says Schultz. "My motto is to fill your home with things that make you happy, but of course try to curate them so it doesn't look cluttered or overwhelming."

You can create a mood board online or do it old-school, cutting and pasting images onto a foam-core board. FLICKR USER DESIGN FOLLY

FANTASY FOOTBALL ADVICE

Fantasy football advice ahead of Week 4, with a look at a change in Philly, an up-and-comer in Houston, and a former MVP who you should bench.

BILL DUBIEL

Bill Dubiel is a fantasy football expert and lead NFL columnist for Rotoballer.com.

Open door in Philly

Veteran scatback Darren Sproles tore his ACL and broke his arm on the same play in Week 3, which means there is a gaping hole in the Philadelphia backfield. LeGarrette Blount is still going to receive a majority of the early-down work, and will still be a force near the goal line, but the passing-down role is now up for grabs. The most obvious candidate to fill the gap is Wendell Smallwood. The second-year back carries even more upside than Sproles despite his unproven status, as he is much more capable on the ground than his predecessor. He tallied 71 yards on 12 carries in Week 3, and has the most "feature back" potential of any running back on the roster.

Showing promise

Deshaun Watson threw for 301 yards and two touchdowns and added 41 yards on eight carries, and very nearly pulled off a massive upset against Tom Brady and the Patriots. Watson was not even named the starter heading into the season, but he quickly overtook the inept Tom Savage, and has been improving ever since. In addition to improved passing stats, Watson has already rushed for 124 yards and a score on just 15 carries, and is showing the double-threat talent.

Cam Newton has had a brutal start to the 2017 season. GETTY IMAGES

Bench Cam

Cam Newton simply can't be trusted for fantasy purposes at this point in time. The former MVP has been positively awful through three games, averaging just 189 passing yards and 15 rushing yards per game. He hasn't thrown a touchdown since Week 1, and has already thrown four interceptions. The loss of his favorite target in Greg Olsen certainly isn't helping, and Kelvin Benjamin is now banged up.

Pickups of the week

Marqise Lee, WR, Jaguars
Lee is currently the safest option in the Jags offense as he has at least four catches and 65 yards in each of the last two weeks.

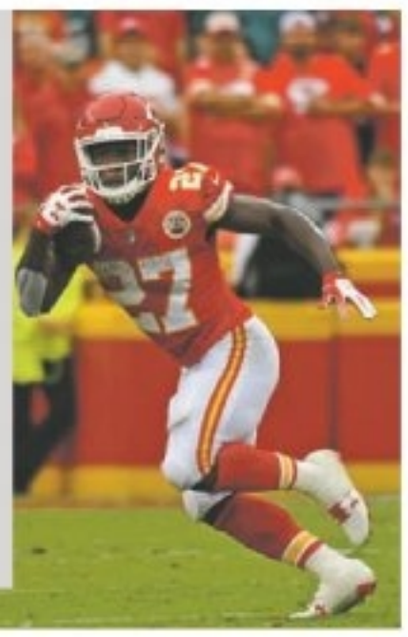
Andre Ellington, RB, Cardinals
Ellington is the clear pass-catching back on the team and he proved more effective than Chris Johnson on the ground in Week 3.

Evan Engram, TE, Giants
Engram has the body and pedigree to be a top TE in the NFL and has at least four catches and 44 yards in each game so far.

NFL power rankings | by Luke Miller

No. 1

Chiefs
3-0 (W vs. LAC)



In a week full of shockers and near-upsets, the top team held serve. Kareem Hunt's fourth quarter 69-yard touchdown run to ice the game gave him a 50-plus yard score in each of his first three career games. He's the first player in NFL history to do that.

No. 2

Falcons
3-0 (W vs. DET)

The secondary is still a concern, but they kept Detroit out of the end-zone for most of the day and when it mattered most. Matt Ryan and the offense recovered from some early interceptions to fire on all cylinders. The Falcons are one of only two undefeated teams left standing.

No. 3

Patriots
2-1 (W vs. HOU)

What's that? Tom Brady isn't done? Color us shocked. Brandin Cooks was inducted into the New England offense with five catches for 144 yards and two touchdowns. Both scores came in the second half, including the game winner and it's ensuing two point conversion (which Cooks also caught.)

No. 4

Packers
2-1 (W at CIN)

While it wasn't the domination many were expecting from the Packers against the Bengals, they came out on the right end of this nailbiter. Do Aaron Rodgers' receivers grow on trees? Perhaps Geronimo Allison is about to take the NFL by storm. Or perhaps the Bengals can't tackle.

No. 5

Redskins
2-1 (W vs. OAK)

Washington did it to the Raiders without Jordan Reed playing or Terrelle Pryor contributing. Since a shaky Week 1, this team has turned in two great performances, including that road victory over the Rams that looks pretty impressive after we see what they're capable of.

No. 6

Raiders
2-1 (L vs. WAS)

Derek Carr passed 100 yards...eventually. One receiver made it over ten yards receiving, and his name wasn't Amari Cooper or Michael Crabtree. Marshawn Lynch held to 18 yards on the ground. Seven first downs, 128 total yards, this offense better get things sorted out.

No. 7

Lions
2-1 (L vs. ATL)

Detroit moves up in the rankings despite losing due to a ton of less-than-impressive performances at the top of the list and the fact that they sort-of beat the Falcons, for a little bit.. Unfortunately, we'll all have to wait until Monday night of Week 9 to see them face the Packers.

No. 8

Broncos
2-1 (L vs. BUF)

The Broncos aren't the first team to blow a game going West to East at 1 p.m. They'll be back in more comfortable confines next week facing the Raiders at home. A win there would signal to Oakland and the Chiefs that not only are the Broncos back, they never really left.

No. 9

Cowboys
2-1 (W at AZ)

The Cowboys absorbed some early troubles to thunder back behind Dak Prescott and a will-not-be-denied touchdown by Dez Bryant. Prescott looked flawless by the end of the game Monday, running the read-option up and down the field and complementing Ezekiel Elliott.

No. 10

Titans
2-1 (W vs. SEA)

After watching Derrick Henry steal the headlines (and many thought, soon the starting role) over the first two weeks, DeMarco Murray rebounded to the tune of 115 rushing yards in Week 3, most of them coming on a 75-yard touchdown that put the Titans up 30-14 late.

Best of the rest

11 — Eagles (2-1)
12 — Steelers (2-1)
13 — Jaguars (2-1)
14 — Vikings (2-1)
15 — Buccaneers (1-1)
16 — Seahawks (1-2)
17 — Panthers (2-1)
18 — Rams (2-1)
19 — Saints (1-2)
20 — Texans (1-2)
21 — Bears (1-2)
22 — Bills (2-1)
23 — Ravens (2-1)
24 — Cardinals (1-2)
25 — Colts (1-2)

'I HAD SEX WITH 10,000 WOMEN'

Famed pro wrestler Ric Flair, who nearly died last month, is alive, kicking — and likely giving rides on "Space Mountain" (Flair's pet name for his manhood).

Flair is having an ESPN "30 for 30" documentary done on him (set to air in November) and he reportedly told the filmmakers that he slept with "roughly 10,000 women" during his wrestling career. Doing the math, that's around 200 women per year (five per week) since 1967.

Wilt Chamberlain, sports's all-time ladies man, once claimed to have bedded 20,000 females. It's tough because I feel like while Flair's number is somewhat realistic, he never had the type of international fame that Chamberlain had at one time. Then again, Chamberlain died relatively young at age 63, and Flair is currently 68. Flair has had five more years to hone his craft.

Of course, the good money says that both of them are full of it. Chamberlain's number is just too outrageous (multiple women per day for 40 something years), and Flair has already been caught lying about his conquests (he claimed to have slept with Halle Berry, to which Berry said she had no idea who the hell he was).

'FRIEND' IS A FUNNY WORD

I never really understood the people who were all riled up when Tom Brady and Bill Belichick stuck by President Donald Trump's side during the last election cycle. If your loudmouth, pathological lying buddy from high school wound up running for POTUS one day — my guess is that you'd still vote for him even if you disagreed with his politics. Ya know, simply because it'd be cool to say you were once chummy with the friggin' president. It's clear now that Brady and Belichick want to distance themselves from Trump as much as they can — because he's the lightning rod of all lightning rods and because they loathe distractions.

It's why Belichick likely told his players before Sunday's game against Houston that they should do whatever the hell they want to do during the national anthem. Belichick knows full well that if he tried to dictate to his players what they should do during the height of the NFL — flag — anthem stuff that it could absolutely do damage to team morale going forward. I'm guessing that even if Belichick didn't have a past with Trump that he would have given them the old, "Hey, it's a free country" line.

I would highly doubt that we'll ever see Brady or Belichick chumming around with Trump again. First, because I'm not even sure they are still friends with the guy given all that's transpired these past few months. Second, because they're two guys who enjoy their privacy — and the mere presence of Trump is as invasive as it gets.

THIS IS GOING TO BE FUN

CRUNCH TIME
MATT BURKE

It's hard to imagine an NBA season having more intriguing storylines heading into it than the 2017-18 campaign, which kicks off in just three weeks. On opening night, the Kyrie Irving-led Celtics will play at Cleveland against LeBron James. Isaiah Thomas will not be playing in that one (he's out until January), but getting to see Gordon Hayward and Irving play their first games in Celtics green against their primary rival in the East will be a must-see attraction.

Irving and LeBron made it though their respective media days this week without trashing one another other too much. LeBron kept calling Irving "kid" and Irving never really calls LeBron by his name … so this will be some pure passive-aggressive fun on opening night.

Aries Nurture important relationships by taking the time to listen to complaints or requests carefully and doing your best to accommodate the ones you love.

Taurus Take time to think matters through before you make a move. Acting in haste will leave you in a precarious position that could influence how you get along with peers.

Gemini Changes at home or to your lifestyle should be made to encourage less spending. Look for ways to cut your overhead and ease the stress you've been feeling.

Cancer Forge ahead with what's most important to you, and start making the necessary adjustments to achieve your aims. Talk to the people you feel are best suited to helping you.

Leo A personal change should be based on your needs and not the product of you trying to appease someone heading in a different direction.

Virgo You are best off thinking matters through and coming up with alternatives that can help smooth over any differences you have with those you live or work with.

Libra Do what you can to get ahead. Working on your own will be your best choice. Take care of your personal and financial obligations before it's close to impossible to do so.

Scorpio Talk is cheap. If someone promises you something, get it in writing. A change of heart will open a door to new opportunities. Celebrate with someone you love.

Sagittarius Ease into anything you want to pursue. Getting all the facts and considering how you can take care of delicate matters OR a relationship will be essential.

Capricorn A little fix-me-up will do you good. Whether you make physical changes or you alter things at home, the results will lift your spirits if you stay within budget.

Aquarius Personal changes can be made, as long as you are reasonable in your expectations and practical about what you are trying to accomplish.

Pisces Personal improvements can be made. Set your sights on your goals, and start making them come true. A financial gain looks promising. EUGENIA LAST
